Minimum Wage Increase

Ballot Measure in June 2016

This week the San Diego Council voted unanimously to place a minimum wage increase on the June 7, 2016 ballot. The Council had legislatively approved the increase in 2014, with an ordinance that called for an increase to $9.75 in January 2015, $10.50 in January 2016, and $11.50 in January 2017. However, a referendum forced this issue onto the ballot for the next municipal election, which will be held this June.

If approved, the minimum wage would increase incrementally to $11.50 by 2017, and provide workers in the City of San Diego the opportunity to earn sick leave. Upon voter approval, the minimum wage would immediately increase from $10.00 to $10.50, followed by an increase to $11.50 in January 2017.

According to an analysis by the Center on Wage and Employment Dynamics at U.C. Berkeley, 214,000 San Diegans would be eligible for a raise by 2017, as a result of the ordinance. With voter support, this measure has the potential to improve the lives of San Diegans by enabling hourly employees to accrue up to 40 hours of sick leave annually, and to earn up to 15% more than they currently do.
